

Westfields managed to come through the tropical storm with minor damage as a result of Hurricane Irene moving up the coast. A few trees and shrubs came down but most of the debris is from leaf and tree limbs that came down with the high winds. As a result of our pruning efforts over that last two years many of the brandford pear trees survived the heavy winds in the center islands of the boulevards.

All of the storm water management ponds that the WBOA manages worked without incident and performed as designed. These ponds were checked prior and after the storm.

In our survey of the park early Sunday morning, we did not see any visible building damage from the roads. Please check your properties and let the WBOA office know if there are any damages to the common areas we need to address.
